

Cuomo, Exit Stage Left

August 11, 2021

Out in a fortnight.

Yesterday, New York's governor said he'd resign in 14 days.

Dominating the headlines has been Andrew Cuomo's sexual misconduct scandals.

"It's [a] shame this is what the Democrats choose to go after Cuomo for, rather than for killing tens of thousands of elderly New Yorkers through his policy of putting COVID-positive patients into nursing homes," we read at InfoWars.

But this is the usual thing to say . . . at least, for those of us who live and breathe and think outside the usual right-left continuum. And in this case, it may not be applicable.

How so?

Well, on Monday, Assembly Member Charles D. Lavine (D-13th A.D.), Judiciary Committee Chair, made it quite clear that the investigations (yes: plural) going into the impeachment of the governor are not limited to matters of sex. Allegations also considered?

But he quickly switched to blaming today's loud and rash (rather than "sound" and "reasonable") politics — on Twitter.

- Cuomo's "improper use of government resources to write and produce a book";
- "allegations concerning [the] nursing home" fiasco; and
- "that he provided preferential access to COVID-19 testing to certain friends and/or family members."

But Cuomo himself isn't talking up these other issues, which are critically important for the state he "runs." In his resignation announcement, he dubbed one such indiscretion literally "thoughtless," openly proclaiming that he "want[ed] to personally apologize" to a female state trooper who accused him of embarrassing sexual banter and unwanted touching.

Up front, however, was his proud proclamation of his support for "diversity."

That is to mollify the current cultural left. But he quickly switched to blaming today's loud and rash (rather than "sound" and "reasonable") politics — on Twitter.

You don't have to love social media to instead blame Cuomo for his own most grievous faults.

This is Common Sense. I'm Paul Jacob.