

Self-Inflicted Death — by Vax?

March 1, 2022

It's been disheartening how little alarm has been raised about the rise of suicide (along with drug use, obesity, and other markers for despair) in reaction to the lockdowns and de-humanizing mask mandates — especially among the young.

But there's another way suicide has become an issue with the pandemic. It's a little roundabout.

Adverse effects of the vaccines have been severely under-reported. A number of maladies are associated with the various vaccines, including micro-clotting and myocarditis — that latter up especially in younger people who have been vaccinated.*

“There is no law or mandate in France that compelled him to be vaccinated. Hence his death is essentially suicide.”

But some adverse reactions are fatal — those up 40 percent in the adult population, says the CEO of one life insurance company.

Our leaders and vaccine promoters don't talk about this: if they admitted fatal side-effects, the push for universal, mandatory vaccination might be generally considered inhumane, even monstrous. But insurance companies have a more pressing concern.

Last month, a Frenchman with a large life insurance policy died of the jab. His family cannot sue the drug company — legal immunity having been granted during the emergency — so his heirs and assigns sued to collect on the insurance. The court denied the claim.

“The side effects of the experimental vaccine are published and the deceased could not claim to have known nothing about it when he voluntarily took the vaccine,” the court's logic runs. “There is no law or mandate in France that compelled him to be vaccinated. Hence his death is essentially suicide.”

And suicide is not covered in most term life insurance policies.

The message: you take your chances with the vaxxes.

If more such cases come to light, this may be the issue that fatally undermines the Vaccine Mandate Narrative.

This is Common Sense. I'm Paul Jacob.