Common Sense

Identified?

June 8, 2023

The current UFO story is not a Big Nothing, but neither is it a Big Something.

Tucker Carlson addressed it on the first episode (6:43 mark) of Tucker on Twitter, his new show solely broadcast on the social media giant's platform.

"A former Air Force officer, who worked for years in military intelligence, came forward as a whistleblower to reveal that the U.S. Government has physical evidence of crashed, non-human-made aircraft, as well as the bodies of the pilots who flew those aircraft," Tucker explained. "The Pentagon has spent decades studying these other-worldly remains in order to build more technologically-advanced weapons systems. OK. That's what the former intel officer revealed, and it's clear he was telling the truth."

Tucker's conclusion? "UFOs are actually real and so, apparently, is extraterrestrial life."

He may have gone a bit overboard. As "skeptic" science writer Michael Shermer notes, there is no real evidence here — at least in The Debrief's June 5 story, upon which most of the journalism is based — just very familiar rumors. Nothing whistleblower David Charles Grusch says is new; hundreds of other alleged whistleblowers have been saying similar things for decades.

What's different? This time one of these whistleblowers has sworn under oath and given testimony to Congress.

Which is not insignificant. Grusch's testimony also, allegedly, points to where in the Deep State the secrets lay hiding.

While the story hardly proves "UFOs are actually real" and so "is extraterrestrial life," it suggests that the Government's contradictory past press releases on the subject may (just may) be provably identified as the lies they've long seemed.

This is Common Sense. I'm Paul Jacob.
