

Pandemic Politics ... or Poltroonery?

February 1, 2024

Fear was a major theme — and ploy — during the pandemic. But it's looking now like the people we have been told to rely upon for our safety are themselves moved by fear. They're cowards, poltroons.

The Centers for Disease Control wrote an alert in the thick of 2021's "vaccine" rollout, warning of the dangers of the Moderna and Pfizer jabs.

It was never sent out.

"In the May 25, 2021, email, exclusively obtained by The Epoch Times, a CDC official revealed why some officials were against sending the alert," explains Zachary Stieber. You see, while an alert to health care professionals using the official Health Area Network system made complete sense, one CDC official gave a clue to her colleagues' hesitance: "people don't want to appear alarmist," you see.

What did we who took the jab risk? Heart inflammation, or myocarditis. The CDC knew this early on.

But did not warn us.

Now, from listening to Dr. John Campbell on YouTube and Rumble, we have learned a lot more (if not in time in 2021) about the myocarditis threat. The takers of the modRNA treatment who are most at risk are those who engage in strenuous exercise soon after inoculation (which explains why the bulk of the afflicted have been boys and young men in the prime of life). Or so I last heard. I am certainly no doctor; I merely rely upon doctors to advise me.

And those doctors, in turn, rely upon official sources of information like the CDC.

Who did not advise them properly.

Who worry too much about "appearing alarmist" and not enough about relaying the best information.

Poltroons!

This is Common Sense. I'm Paul Jacob.
