Iranian Revolutionary Climate

September 1, 2025

I was once bitterly opposed to the climate change. One minute raining, then snowing, then desert sun. Enough already.

But now I see that we need the climate change to fight tyranny.

Not everyone agrees. Nina Bookout simply refuses to accept the latest super-sophisticated scientific reasoning about how widespread protests happening in Iran — ostensibly because of a theocracy that is stomping everybody — are secretly being motivated by the climate change!!!!

You know it's scientific if it's in "Scientific American", a lot smarter now that it has dumbed down its content in recent decades.

But Bookout just won't follow the "science."

Scientific American says climate change is "among the environmental challenges facing Iran that helped spark protests in dozens of cities.... A severe drought, mismanaged water resources and dust storms diminished Iran's economy in recent years."

Protests are happening most in places with "climate refugees."

Bookout differs: "The Iranian people KNOW that billions of dollars was freighted to Iran on Obama's say-so. Thus, for several years, the Iranian government has had financial resources available to help those impacted by the drought and the earthquakes.... Instead the Iranian government [have been using] their cash ... to prop up Hamas, Hezbollah, terrorism in Syria, and build up their military.... The security forces aren't attacking protestors because of climate change."

I'm with Scientific American. Let us have climate change wherever autocrats oppress the people, so that people will resist this oppression.

Thank you for your help, climate change.

This is Common Sense. I'm Paul Jacob.
